

When one gives a spare room,
and another offers up to 10 hours of social support...
That's a Homeshare!

1 Householder
(someone who has a spare room)

1 Homesharer
(someone who provides some support in return)

1 Homeshare

Often people who do Homeshares find that they have common interests or can teach each other new skills. So if you've ever wanted to learn a new language, make cakes like Mary Berry or surf the internet, then maybe you should think about Homeshare.

Who are Householders?

As a householder, when you have a spare room to offer, and someone gives you up to ten hours of social support in return – that's a Homeshare.

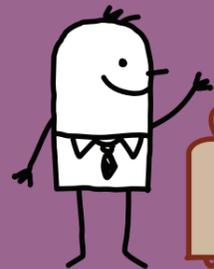

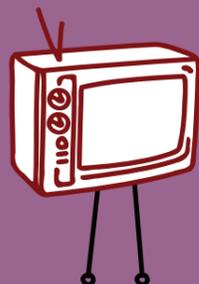

Sometimes there comes a stage in life when a little bit of support can make life that much easier. Getting that social support isn't cheap, it can be pretty impersonal and there's no guarantee the same person will support you all the time.

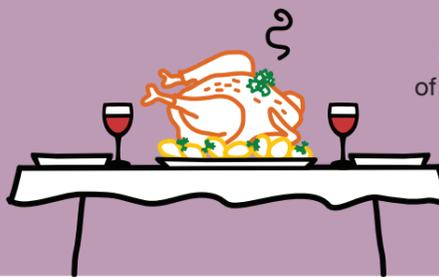

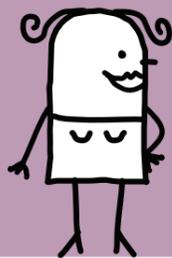

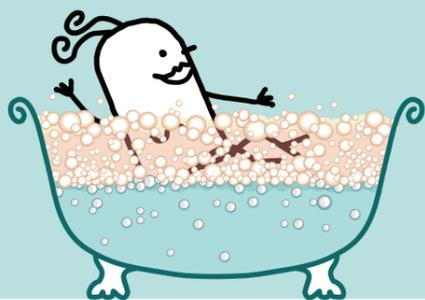

If you have a spare room and are willing to let someone live with you then you could have some really good, personalised support for not very much at all*.

This might be help with the shopping, cleaning, going out for a meal, doing the garden, or whatever you think would make a your life a bit better.

New research has found that loneliness has the same effect on health as smoking fifteen cigarettes a day, so being in a Homeshare is good for your health too!

Who are Homesharers?

As a homesharer, when someone offers a spare room in return for up to ten hours of social support - that's a Homeshare.

Homesharers giving ten hours of support might just be starting out in life, trying to get on the property ladder, saving for tuition fees, or a whole load of other things.

Homeshare saves you money. If you provide up to ten hours personalised support, you could get your accommodation for not very much at all*.

As well as saving money, Homesharers providing support can put something really impressive on their CV, maybe make a friend for life and open themselves up to all sorts of new experiences.

* Householders and Homesharers pay a small monthly management fee so that we can supervise the arrangement, make sure everyone is kept safe and help with any problems. You may also share utility bills.
